Budget: A Crossroads for Reagan? Move on Legislative Impasse May Shape His Future

By Steven R. Weisman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Although there has been little publicity about the budget at the White House lately. President Ronald Reagan is approaching what his aides say is a turning point that seems likely to shape the character of his presidencv through the 1984 election.

The decision Mr. Reagan faces is whether to involve himself fully in the effort to break a budget stalemate in the Republican-controlled Senate. The Senate Budget Committee has bogged down in disagreement over possible tax increases and other steps to reduce the federal budget deficit for the 1984 fiscal year.

Realistically, in the view of the White House, the president's decision comes down to whether he is prepared to give his blessings to a budget compromise that might be better than what he could get otherwise but is still far from his lik-

Major Crimes Decline 4% in U.S.

WASHINGTON (NYT) - The number of major crimes reported in the United States last year declined 4 percent from 1981, the Federal Bureau of Investigation said Tuesday. It was the first real decline in reported major crimes since 1977, the agency said.

A decrease of less than 1 percent, recorded in 1981, was considered statistically insignificant, said Ann Graham, writer and editor of the bureau's Uniform Crime Reports. She said the statistics were preliminary figures and that the final figures, to be issued in August, might be adjust-

Attorney General William French Smith, who issued the statistics, said that after "all-time highs in 1980 and 1981, the decline is welcome news." The FBI reported these declines: murder, 7 percent; robbery, 7 percent; burgiary, 10 percent; forcible rape, 5 percent; larceny, 1 percent; motor vehicle theft, 3 percent; and arson, 12 percent. The only increase was in aggravated assault, which went up by 1 percent.

French Minister Visiting Komania

PARIS (UPI) - The French minister of external relations, Claude Cheysson, left for Bucharest on Wednesday, reportedly to try to improve relations with Romania. Releations have been cool because of an incident involving a Romanian dissident exile in France.

Mr. Cheysson will meet with Romanian leaders Thursday, possibly including the Communist party leader, Nicolae Ceaucescu, but a meeting had not been set when Mr. Cheysson left Paris, officials said.

An exiled dissident Romanian writer, Virgil Tanase, said in September that he had been "abducted" by French counterintelligence agents to protect him from a Romanian secret agent whom Bucharest allegedly sent to France to kill him. The Romanian Embassy called the incident "a slanderous campaign against Romanía."

U.S. Court Rules Against A-Plants

WASHINGTON (WP) - The Supreme Court, in a setback for the nuclear power industry and its supporters in the Reagan administration, ruled Wednesday that states may act on their own to slow or stop the development of nuclear plants.

In a unanimous decision upholding a California moratorium on con-struction of power plants, the court said regulation of nuclear power was not the exclusive preserve of the federal government as had been claimed by the nuclear power industry and the Reagan administration.

The justices thus licensed the states to regulate nuclear power along with the federal government and to move against the further growth of nuclear power according to local sentiment. Eight states have broad laws similar to the California measure at issue Wednesday.

It is believed that the increases involved in nuclear expenses will be substantial, requiring the reductions in conventional forces.

The defense expert, who requested that he not be identified, asserted that the restructuring "enhances our capability to intervene alongside our allies if need be."

The government program calls for setting up a "rapid action and assistance command" that will take in an airborne division, a helicopter division, a light armor division, an infantry division, and a division of marine infantry. This, according to the expert, would mean the availability of 50,000 additional men for use in Europe.

No figures were available on how many of the 50,000 French troops currently stationed in West Germany would be withdrawn, but the expert said the missions and basic deployment of the French forces there would be maintained.

and their equipment improved.

He stressed that the network of French forces overseas, notably in Africa, and taking in about 20,000 men, would be kept intact.

The number of combat helicopters will be increased from 330 to 430 by 1988. The expert described the new force as part of France's effort to increase its ability to prevent an attack from the East. The plan continues to leave ambiguous the point at which French forces would be committed to defend West Germany against attack.

A member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, France left NATO's integrated military command in 1966. Basic French military doctrine remains one of repelling attack when it is judged to threaten French territory.

French Cabinet Moves to Ban Slot Machines

The Associated Press PARIS — The cabinet of President François Mitterrand innounced Wednesday that it had drafted a law to ban slot machines from cases and bars.

The draft law, which should have no trouble winning approval in the Socialist-dominated Parliament, will prohibit the manufacture, importation, ownership and installation of "all machines of chance from which it is possible to make a profit." It will limit other machines, such as pinball, to winnings of a maximum of five free

In banning the machines, the government also will be doing tself out of some revenue. Max Gallo, the government spokes-man, said there were about 30,000 machines throughout the country, which do about eight billion francs ($1.1 billion) in business in a year. Each machine is subject to an annual tax of about $680. Local authorities also tax them an average of about $230.

Dr. Bouhoutsos said that earlier studies have suggested that about 5.6 percent of male therapists and .6 percent of female therapists may become sexually involved with their patients.

Even though the code of ethics of the American Psychiatric and Psychological associations and of the National Association of Social Workers all prohibit sexual intimacy, the number of ethics committee and legal actions stemming from such cases has been climbing in recent years. It is thought that the rising number of actions may not reflect an increase in actual incidents, but in the number of patients filing complaints. In California, the law was changed in 1981 to make sexual activity with patients a specific cause for license revocation.

Although professional associations and most mental health workers regard sexual intimacy with patients as a taboo, a few therapists have argued that it can be helpful. However, Dr. Moore said no legitimate school of thought holds that it is beneficial.

For the current paper, the co-authors sent a ques-tionnaire to 4,385 licensed psychologists in California asking for anonymous data on patients who had reported sexual intimacy with a previous therapist.

Of the 704 psychologists who responded, 318 reported that they had treated 559 such patients. Although the second therapists were all psychologists. the previous therapists who had engaged in sexual in-timacy included psychiatrists, psychologists, licensed clinical social workers, marriage, family and child

The authors acknowledged several weaknesses in the research. For example, it excluded any patients who either felt they did not need additional psychoapist. In addition, the study relied on memories that had been filtered through both the patients and the subsequent therapists. The questionnaire also did not define sexual intimacy in order to see what the psychologists and patients considered sexually intimate behavior. Freeze — and Then?

The nuclear freeze resolution that comes before the House of Representatives this week is a primal scream against mankind's atomic predicament. All right, agreed: The overhanging nuclear nightmare justifies screaming. But then what? To exclaim "Stop nukes now" displays passion but no practicality. What is the next sentence? Where is the credible arms control policy that freeze advocates have failed so far to out forward?

To its credit, the movement has aroused widespread public support, undoubtedly tempering the belligerency of the Reagan administration's statements and helping to induce the reasonable new proposal for the Euromissile negotiations in Geneva. The freeze movement has also stirred congressional interest in arms control and probably influenced the Scoweroft commission's farsighted proposal to replace destabilizing multi-warhead missiles with small, single-warhead "Midgetman." Yet the proposals of the freeze movement itself have barely evolved past the original, simplistic formula of "stop, now."

The House resolution still calls for an "immediate" freeze through negotiations with Moscow. Yet such negotiations would have to take several years. The resolution still calls for a "verifiable" halt in producing nuclear arms. Nice. but infeasible.

A freeze would ban modernization of weapons, thus halting improvements in weapons that would stabilize the balance of terror. The resolution calls for but fails to give useful "special attention" to destabilizing first-strike weapons. It would freeze America in a potentially vulnerable Minuteman land-missile deployment while doing nothing about the Soviet Union's potential first-strike force. The remedy, the ingenious Scowcroft proposal to create "Midgetman," would be barred.

Is there some way to harness all this political energy to constructive arms control ends? There is talk of a conference committee compromise between House and Senate resolutions, but the best that this could produce is a least-common-denominator compromise. What is needed is a new approach to the arms control dilemma along the lines suggested by the Scowcroft report.

Two imaginative precursors of this proposal are already before Congress. The "builddown" proposal sponsored by Senators Nunn and Cohen would require dismantling of two older nuclear weapons for every new one deployed. Representative Gore's comprehensive plan would also move the superpowers toward the Scowcroft goal of reducing multiple-war-head missiles. Both would build on the SALT treaties, but emphasize ceilings on warheads rather than launchers and missiles.

A dozen or more pro-freeze senators have endorsed the build-down idea. Unfortunately, instead of welcoming such innovations, many freeze enthusiasts attack them. And the House Democratic leadership continues to press for the freeze resolution: Stop, now.

But there is still no next sentence. Where is the program to match the piety? -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Stain on the Gulf

Residents of Kuwait got a bad fright Tues- Iran agrees to a wider cease-fire. Iran is conday morning when their newspapers ran pictures of a dark, ominous shape approaching the shore. The dreaded giant oil slick from the damaged offshore oil well in the Gulf had arrived. Before panic ensued, it emerged that the photographs had been published upside down. The glowering black mass they showed was no oil slick but the mainland of Kuwait.

The irony of the episode is how well it reflects the Gulf states' share in their calamity. Like the overly fortunate king whose touch turned everything, even his food, to gold, they are in peril of drowning in their own oil.

The Iranian well started leaking on Feb. 8, and the damage was made worse by an Iraqi attack on March 2. Yet it took until the end of March for the coastal states to start cooperating to contain the damage.

As for the belligerents, their positions become more intransigent as the slick grows. Iraq refuses to guarantee safe conduct for American technicians to cap the wells unless tent to let the slick threaten the Gulf states that bankroll Iraq's war effort; its cease-fire terms are $50 billion in reparations and an Iraqi apology. Meanwhile, the heavy crude gushes from the crippled wells at the rate of several thousand barrels a day. About 200,000 barrels of oil are floating in the Gulf. Satellite photos show the slick covering an appreciable fraction of the Gulf's waters.

Because the Gulf is shallow and has only a narrow exit to the ocean, the slick could be far more destructive than spills in open seas. Fisheries, ports and desalination plants are threatened. Saudi Arabia has already closed one of its plants and banned fishing.

Locked in a senseless war, Iran and Iraq have been killing each other's young men for 31 months. The spilt blood has been seeping almost unnoticed into the sand. But now, in the spreading oil spill, the stain of this mad battle is there for all the world to see.

More Big Deficits

David Stockman, the budget director, has sent a memorandum to President Reagan and comes to cutting off care for mentally retardthe cabinet warning that their economic poli- ed, severely handicapped or hopelessly ill chilcies may well produce $200-billion deficits "as far as the eye can see." Mr. Stockman's numbers show that, even with the Reagan administration's new cheerier economic forecast calling for sustained growth over the next five years, budget deficits are unlikely to narrow unless the president is willing to get out in front in persuading Congress to do two things that he personally opposes: raise taxes and restrain defense spending.

The administration cannot expect Congress to bail it out as happened last year. With the economy headed up, rather than down, last year's sense of urgency has been dissipated. Congress is unlikely to make further deep cuts in domestic spending. Who would vote to cut another $1.5 billion from food stamps and welfare for families when poverty is growing? It is all very well to talk about restraining dren and adults, support tends to vanish.

On the defense budget, the Pentagon has locked Congress into a host of expensive weapons starts. Canceling contracts would cause so much grief to particular congressmen that Congress is unlikely to be able to keep defense growth even within the somewhat more modest targets that the budget committees have tentatively set.

Passing a sound tax-reform and revenueraising measure would require strong presidential leadership now, before election year politicking gets in full swing. Without concerted action this administration, which entered office on a balanced-budget platform, might as well resign itself to responsibility for the largest and most enduring peacetime deficits, by any measure, in American history.

Par for a Mindless Course

When each of the Middle East's uncountable disaffected parties has its resident squad in Beirut, there can be little guarantee of security for people as exposed as the American mission or the international peacekeeping force. That is one of the calculations the Americans have had to accept in their efforts to take Lebanon off the boil. It is not only they who have been victims in the latest atrocity, but also Arabs who happened to be queuing outside. That was not necessarily a miscalculation on the attackers' part, because in this type of urban warfare the bomb's the thing.

One can easily sympathize with the Goldwater reaction — get the hell out — which must be widespread in America. Before long that will be the only thing to do, whatever the consequences for Lebanon. But the U.S. presence in Lebanon is part of a strategy which, for all its feeble execution up to now, is the only hopeful one on offer for the region.

The bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut demonstrates again that mindless violence and irrationality prevail in the Middle East. The United States sent its troops reductantly as part of a peacekeeping force after the with-drawal of the PLO from Beirut. BERLIN - Germany's attitude on the Jewish question is purely a national affair and will have no effect on the teams of other nations entered officially for the Olympic Games in 1936. Assurance on this score was given here by Carl Diem, secretary of the German Athlet-ic Federation and a member of the German Olympic Committee. He spoke in reply to rumors that the 1936 Olympic Games might be transferred to another venue because of the racial problem. "Every Olympic contestant who has been certified by his country," said Diem, "will be given the most cordial treatment, irrespective of race and color. Occupied Cambodia: Now Better Off All the Same PHNOM PENH — During a recent press tour in Cambodia, an American reporter was approached by a low-level government functionary who posed a question that had obviously been troubling him for years. "Do you know why we were defeated in '75?" he asked in a whisper so that no one could overhear. "It was because the Ameriwould not have lost. Too bad. Why did the Americans leave?"

It was a question for which the reporter had no good answer. He could have talked about how many people thought the United States had no business fighting in Southeast Asia, or how, possibly, he was misguided

Khmer Rouge deserved a better ex-planation. Henry A. Kissinger, the architect of U.S. Cambodia policy in the early 1970s, might have one. The reporter did not.

Throughout the reporter's twoweek tour of Phnom Penh and the countryside it became clear that if there was misunderstanding about America's actions in Cambodia a decade ago, there is also widespread confusion about the current attitude of the United States.

Government officials and Western observers might debate how enthusiastically the people embraced the new communist government or the 180,000 to 200,000 Vietnamese troops that remain to prop it up. But there is no question that people are unified on two points: their hatred of the Pol Pot regime, which may have killed more than a million civilians. and fear that the Khmer Rouge may somehow return to power.

Officially the U.S. position on Cambodia is to follow the lead of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations. ASEAN is vehemently op-posed to Vietnam's continued domination of Cambodia and has successfully blocked the pro-Hanoi Heng Samrin government from winning

Cambodia: Analogous to Poland

WASHINGTON — In these days of remembering the anguish of the Holocaust and commenorating those who survived, let us take just a moment to consider the crimes that continue in Cambodia. No one knows how many Cambodians were killed after the communists took control. Estimates run from one-third to one-half of the population, which means the count is easily 2 to 3 million. After such slaughter, the Vietnamese commu nists moved in supposedly to stabilize the country. For those who have been thinking of the Holocaust, this is analogous to the Russians "liberating" Poland from the Nazis.

There are 200,000 Vietnamese soldiers occupying Cambodia. Behind them, following a policy dictated from Hanoi, hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese are beginning to settle the country. Unlike Martha, Rendlesham does not own her shops. They are franchised and financed by separate British companies.

Why did she select Saint Lau-ent? "Because I think he's the best." she said. "I'd reached the stage where I did not want to exand I only wanted to get involved with the best. Just by chance, it happened."
What about Chloe? "Another

take the chic away from clothes by wearing sizes that are too small. All clothes have to be slightly bigger."

Even with Saint Laurent, where the picture is pretty clear, there is still room to pick and choose, Rendelesham said. Her own choices this season included leather. There's a great feeling for leather right now, the belted coats, like the ones Yves did in couture, and satin - heavy and tailored, as well as the little velvet dress and raincoats It's been ages since we've had a good raincoat," was Rendlesham's very British observation. "And here we've had all that rain."

Rendlesham said Saint Laurent brought couture to ready-to-wear and "his clothes are so well made that unless you have a figure problem you can dress in Rive Gauche shops."

She feels, for economic reasons," the London Chloe is very different from the Paris Chloe. "For next season, we have taken certain daytime shapes and put them in evening fabrics. This look is more London than embroidered dresses that would cost 2000 to 3000 pounds ($3500 to $4500). It's too limited a market for England's continuing economic crisis. I don't think people have that kind of money to spend."

Like Martha, Rendlesham doesn't "play it safe. Otherwise, there'd be no point," she said.

• Anita Smaga: Another respected retailer, Smaga, has shops spread over a good chunk of Geneva's chic Rue du Rhone. At this the built-in confidence of her customers. "It goes both ways," she said. The report rejected dramatic proposals that have been made in the U.S. Congress and some academic circles calling for the World Bank or some other institution to take over the Third World debt at a discount and turn at least some of it into longer-term loans at lower interest

An official summary of the report released here approvingly quoted the view of Jacques de Larosiere, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, that "there does not exist a global debt crisis." The authors agreed with Mr. de Larosière's contention that the debt problem is one of liquidity - a temporary but embarrassing shortage of cash resources rather than one of insolvency. It is Mr. Abby's task as director of the ceinture verte, (green belt), project to halt and stabilize the seemingly inexorable march of the desert on Mauritania's capital. If he fails, Novakchott might literally be covered over in sand. Matters are so serious that one Friday last month, a group of workers gave up their sabbath morning to do "voluntary "ork," clearing sand that had encroached on the town's man hospital.

The green belt is planned as a 20-kilometer long by oneskinneter deep swath of trees and shrubs to the north and authorst of the city. For 200 days a year winds shuffle the his layer of sand southward, and the yellow danes "walk" roject has made only the slightest impact. Not until the has become known as "descriptication."

bush, eupharbia balsamifera, which seems to survive and grow without any water at all, have been planted. The trees, prosopis chilensis, have been only half successful for they do need water — and rainfall has been scant enough recently in this desolate Sahelian country. One encouraging sign is the reappearance of 17 species of indigenous plants among the newly planted greenery. Immediately next to the green belt there is nothing but between end there is nothing but barren sand.

The desert is laying siege to 15 other towns in the Sahel, on the southern fringe of the Sahara. The Protection of Nature Office of the Ministry of Rural Development hopes soon, funds and foresters permitting, to plant green belts there as well. Novadhibou, Boutilimit, Tanchakket, the copper town of Akjouit, and principally Novakehott, are threat-ened as a direct result of the great drought of 1968-73. But those rainless years — and others that have followed interoward the sea across an uninterrupted landscape. So far the mittently — are not exclusively to blame for the process that "It was very full before, what with the fragile soil and the overpopulation of both humans and cattle," he said.

There were droughts in the Western Sahel before, from 1910 to 1914 and twice again in the early 1940s. Who knows how many living things were driven southward, or simply perished from hunger and thirst? When the good years re-turned, the survivors trekked northward again. In Darwinihealth services, lower infant mortality rates, and longer-living adults meant that the Sahel population increased. Likewise, animal husbandry, in particular a successful campaign against rinderpest, saw the cartle and camel population expand sharply. More wells were dug, provid for more animals, but not more grazing land. Most cattle

Return to Civilian Rule Proves Elusive Objective

By Isla MacLean

NOUAKCHOTT - When the military took over in July 1978, Mauritania was divided and virtually bankrupt for several reasons. not least the war in the western Sahara. To remedy the situation, the newly formed military committee improve the economy and restore

The committee achieved the first by signing the peace treaty with the Polisario in Angust 1979. It is working hard on the economy. But it has found the political problem the most elusive.

The all-powerful Military Committee for National Salvation is still very much in the driving seat. Three lientenant colonels, three majors and a naval commander hold portfolios in the cabinet, ining those of prime minister and defense, foreign affairs and cooperation and interior. Soldiers check identity papers of travelers entering or leaving cities by road or air and make spot checks, some-times at night, in the towns.

There has been a crackdown on political activists — scores of rightist, Iraqi-supporting Baathists are in prison, though no date has been set for their trial. As the head of state, Lieutenant Colonel Mohammed Khouna Ould Haidalla, said last November, the general level of the armed and security forces has been raised.

Slow progress toward a return to civilian rule can be explained by the general lack of security in the country. Just last January there were rumors of a plot to overthrow Colonel Haidalla. Last year, the first military leader, Lieutenant Colonel Mustafa Onld Mohammed Salek, and the former prime minister, Sid'Ahmed Ould B'Neijara, were jailed for 10 years for plotting a return to power.

The most serious challenge to Colonel Haidalla came in March 1981 when two ousted members of the military committee led an at-tack on the presidential palace in Diop recalled. "Land was specially Nouakchort. The coup failed but created for this project, and was seven people died, making it Mau-then dissolved. When the refinery ritania's first bloody attempted putsch. Agriculture Decline Troubling Economy

NOUAKCHOTT - The most serious economic problem facing Mauritania is the decline in agricultural production, according to Assame Diop, director of the latest

Rainfall was good in 1981, so with some help from abroad there was enough to eat. Last year's rainfall was down catastrophically, the crops were poor and a further exodus to the towns is awaited, resulting in yet greater dependence on foreign food aid. Mr. Diop lists other problems — apart from the decline in iron reveme, and the inability to harvest the rich fishing potential. There had been a bad allocation of resources in the rural areas, with doubtful benefits from dams now under construction, like Gorgol-Noir. He listed "the very high level of public debt in relation to export revenue."

Often, the project for which the money was borrowed has shown little return — the copper mine at Akjoujt is closed, the Novadhibou oil refinery is trying to open and the sugar refinery outside Nouakchott has been little short of "An American firm, Land Engineering, won the contract for $9 million, but subcontracted to an was completed in 1977 the cost had become $40 million. We get Arab petrodol-lars and Western equipment, thus belping Europe find a short-term solution to their recession - while we are stuck with the debt."

The relatively promising decade after Mauritanian independence was followed by the drought and the Sahara war, during which time Arab countries provided heavy budgetary support. After the 1979 these funds decreased dramatically but already the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have been called in to advise on debt rescheduling, tighter budget ing and wiser investment in the three years ending in 1981, the real value of gross domestic product grew at an average rate of 6 percent. (The gross domestic product per capita in 1981 was $400.)

But in 1982, this fairly swift growth is expected to have decelerated to around 4 percent while the foreign debts mount. It is estimated that total external assistance in 1981 made up about half of Mauritania's total expenditure (much of it from Arab petrodollars, which will certainly be harder to come by as the price of oil drops).

By 1982, it could be up in the 160-percent range, with further demanding years in 1983 and 1986 when large short-term and medium-term loans

-Illegal Fishing of Territorial Waters Removes a Rich Source of Revenue

By Howard Schissel

NOUAKCHOTT — Every year Mauritania loses everal hundred million dollars in potential revenue science of illegal fishing of its termional waters.

Although the government of President Khouna but Haidalla has intensified efforts since 1980 to ontrol this vital natural resource, the organized pil-age of its maritime wealth continues virtually mahatd by ultramodern fishing vessels flying foreign flags. Mauritania's 900 kilometer long coastline ranks meng the richest fishing grounds off Africa. This is he result of favorable warm currents and yearly ups-rellings that render the area around the Arguin Bank, iff the port of Nonadhibou, an ideal breeding zone or most valuable fish species.

It has only been since independence in 1960 that Astritania has sought to benefit from its fishing po-ntial. Traditionally only minor tribes, like the Imra-uen, engaged in fishing the majority of the Moorish-iles preferring nomadic animal husbandry in the rid hinterland. Even today, fish is not a favorite food-or the Mancienciane But with cattle heads being deor the Manritanians. But with cattle herds being de-leted there are signs that eating habits are changing. Fishing methods of the Imraguen were archaic. Un-Lrecently they did not use boats, but waded in shalw waters using large nets. The most sought-after roduct of traditional fishing was poutargue, or what becally referred to as "Mauritanian caviar."

Lacking in sea-faring tradition, expertise and capiil, Mauritania relied on cooperation agreements with Vestern, Asian and Soviet bloc nations to exploit its sking resources. The government became increasing-dissatisfied with the lack of good will from its parters and decided to phase out fishing licenses in the no 1970s and encourage joint ventures between forgn government or private companies and either the Economic planners in Novakehott concluded that it possible to earn more hard currency in the medium rm from fishing than from Mauritania's present key tport, iron ore. Moreover, fishing has the advantage being a renewable natural resource, if properly isnaged, and could remain an important revenue Durce long after the mineral reserves have been ex-were made to reinforce regional fishing cooperation with neighbors.

Mauritania has found it difficult to enforce its anthority over the zone. With a small coast-guard and air-patrol capacity, stopping unauthorized vessels from trawling has been difficult. Ship captains are often willing to accept relatively minor penalties for ille-gal fishing because the possibilities of profit are so bion

About a dozen joint-venture fishing companies op-erate in the port of Nouadhibou. Officials have a difficult task in trying to assess the extent of the catch, which serves as the basis for determining state reve-

In 1981, for example, only 120,000 tons of fish were officially declared to maritime authorities. It is reliably estimated that about one million tons were actually netted in Mauritanian waters that year. Fishing earnings were $35 million in 1981, but if regulations were strictly applied the earnings could have been around $350 million.

The quest for the maximum gain by poaching vessels encourages highly destructive fishing methods: deep-sea nets literally scrape bare the ocean floor, creating a maritime wasteland and permanently perturbing breeding grounds. Cargos of low-value fish frequently are jettisoned if schools of more economically attractive cases are apprented on some screens. attractive ones are pimpointed on sonar screens.

Speculation in the fishing industry is a problem for the government. It is an open secret in Nouakchott that last year's cabinet reshuffle was carried out primarily to remove the minister of fisheries. The new minister, Mohammed Ould Sidi Ali, has come up against a powerful pressure group composed of Mau-ritanian businessmen in the fishing sector, La Federation des Industries et Armements de Peche, known as

Last year, Prime Minister Maouya Ould Sidi Ahmed Taya called for an "end to the anarchic poli-cies in the fishing sector, which have led to the flourishing of fictitious companies and all sorts of irregu-larities." One of the incidents that led to this declaration was the discovery that the Dutch-owned (but Bermuda-registered) company, Inter-Peche, was a front for South African interests.

One of the key problems standing in the way of the creation of a modern integrated fishing-canning industry is the lack of infrastructure at the port of Nouadhibou. "How do you expect us to compete gainst Las Palmas in the Canary Islands when Nouadhibou still does not have an international telephone service, a reliable electricity network, satisfactory hotels and other amenities and only a few international flights a week," said Magid Kamil, legal adviser at the Ministry of Fisheries.

Noticeable advances are being made to increase the number of Mauritanians both in the technical and administrative level. Figures provided by M. Abdullahi Abdel Fetah of Guelbs indicate that 80 at of the 1,300 people building the project are Mauritanians, and that when the mine is working. only one in 20 of the 1,000 employees will be expatriates.

One promising area for economies is in the rehabilitation of machinery, which suffers appallingly from the ubiquitous sand. Every year, 5,000 wheels have to be replaced on the railway rolling stock because of the heavy loads. Both the mine and the railway could save literally millions of dollars a year by planned maintenance weld-ing, thus reducing the buge expenditure on spare parts. There are good local welders, but the sheer volume of work requires better training, bigger machine shops and real incentive from higher up.

The SNIM steel plant in Novadhibou is an attempt to esproduction levels. A good proportion is sold in West Africa, but ironically the local market has been hesitant about giving up traditional sources of supply.

Education has been used by militants of both the Arabic-speaking Moors and the Puular, Soninke, and Wolof-speaking Africans to make political demands for what they perceive to be in the interests of their ethnic group. On occasion, their actions have even forced the government to modify its policy.

Few teachers and pupils in Manritania will forget the 1965-1966 year. Some still bear the scars of the bitter fighting that broke out between Islamic militants supporting a government de-cision to make Arabic the official language and black Africans who, given that their own languages were discouraged, were clinging to French as the language used to

The fighting spilled onto the streets in several regional towns as well as the capital, Nonakchott, where the lycée was closed for alment of the day compromised. Pupils were to spend an extra year in primary school and be taught in Arabic only for the first year and in both Arabic and French for the other six years. Secondary-school pupils were to spend one year less at school and be streamed into Arabic or what was called bilingual (or French) streams. Those learning in Arabic could take French as ed that those in the Arabic stream take Arabic as a second language.

But violence erupted again, although on a smaller scale, in 1979. mounted political protests that induded the demand to be taught in their own languages. Student strikes in the summer led to clashes in the streets. As a result, the military Committee for National Salvation took its first major decision on domestic policy and in October announced a reform of the education system. Within six years, French was to be relegated to the status of a foreign language and all pupils were to be taught in their own languages. But as Puular, Soninke and Wolof are essentially spoken languages, the committee created an Institute of National Languages, which was to transcribe the languages, collect (and, if necessary, translate) educational material, train teachers and generally prepare for the introduction of the African languages into the education

Arabic was to remain the comalsory second language for those in the French-language stream. It was to become the langue de ciment or common language because, so the military committee argued, all Mauritanians are Moslem and, therefore, learn some Arabic from the Koran, and because the 1977 census had shown that a majority of the population (white and black Moor) speak Arabic as their first

This reform is the to go into effect in two years time. So far, the institute has been at work for four years and, despite a limited budget, has made some progress. Last year, it joined with parents of African schoolchildren in Nouakchott to set up the first experimental African-language

A glance at the map shows the north and the east of the country as inhabited by not much more than dunes, escarpments, occasional wells, but no tracks worthy of recording. Zouerate is now the third largest town (30,000), but without the iron ore workings, it would just have been another drinking hole in the desert. I was there in mid-February, in the heart of the so-called winter, and the heat was so intense I was glad to get into the canteen at the Guelbs site and linger over a hinch of boeif bourguignon and crème caramel. But no longer do we adhere to the slogan. The Jews

Slowing March of the Dunes Toward Sea

There was a time, fairly recently, when more than three-quarters of the Moors were nomads. Today, fewer than one in four is. So that Nouakchott, a small trading settlement of 1,000 people at independence in 1960, then planned as a capital city of 25,000, had bulged to 150,000 in 1976, and today is well over 350,000. The rural migrants, in their tents, shacks, corrugated iron homes, almost surround the town. They make up two-thirds of its population.

The effect of this sedentarization is much the same on a small village as it is on Nouakchott. People live enough water in its wells, sufficient wood for heating and cooking and grazing for the livestock. Then the settlers arrive. They overcultivate the land. Very soon the wells dry up, and the band of vegetation that surrounds the settlement is grazed and chopped away in an ever-in-creasing circle. The bigger the town, the bigger the desert - unless contrary steps are taken.

Recently Novakchott has been enveloped in thick clouds of sand for weeks on end. The older people say the storms came earlier and were worse than ever before.

The vicious spiral of drought, human migration, food shortages, and desert onslaught are not inevitable developments. As Alan Grainger points out in "Desertifi-cation," (published by Earthscan, London), "drought is the result of weather systems, but desertification is a result of the actions of man." Most scientists are agreed, he says, "that changes in climate are not responsible for the vast areas of land going out of produc-tion each year."

Overcultivation, deforestation and overgrazing are the main causes of the process. Mr. Grainger said they "strip vegetation from the soil and deplete its organic and nu-trient content, leaving it exposed to the eroding forces of the sun and wind." It becomes as dry as dust, and blows away in the wind. The fense groups. 13,000 Emigrants Work in France

By Pierre Haski

PARIS - More than 13,000 Mauritanians live in France, a majority of them having left their homeland because of the drought of the early 1970s.

Most of the Mauritanian workers in France are former destitute farmers and herders from the Senegal river region in southern Mauritania. 30me Analysts See Turbulence Continuing for Airline Stocks

fter doubling in 1982, prices of U.S. airline stocks have stalled this A fter doubting in 1982, prices of U.S. airline stocks have stalled this year, bucking the head wind of increasingly savage fare wars and onlined staggering losses, estimated at a half billion dollars in the first narter for the industry.

No one is predicting that the stocks will crash and burn, but how high up for the airlines?

The highly leveraged companies traditionally outperform Wall Street andexes in the early stages of a bull market, when an economic upturn is anticipated. "You buy the stocks, then look for a time and price to sell," dvised Charles Hanneman, transportation analyst for Thomson McKinder on, in Europe this week.

That is exactly what a new report on the industry by First Boston attempts: Reckoning the potential appreciation left in airline stocks, which are about 25 percent above their last peak, in 1978, but well below all-time highs set in the 1960s.

"Valuation questions are more ifficult for airlines than for other industries not only because of the industries not only because of the also because prior to 1979 this was a tightly regulated industry," writes Michael Derchin.

Deregulation has radically changed the airline industry's Since that time, deregulation financial strategies.'

has radically changed the airline industry's marketing operating and financial strategies. The financial results of the 1979-1982 period suggest that some airlines have clearly done a better job of restructing than others."

His associate at First Boston, RoseAnn Tortora, elaborated on the subject of valuations by pointing out that "peak earnings" — what the airlines can earn at the top of the economic upswing — also indicate when investors might unload the stocks at their next highs.

"But no one has ever seen in a deregulated environment how much money the airlines can make when the economy is booming — when everybody wants to fly," she said. "All we've seen during the recession is the other side when they don't want to."

Impressed by Regionals

Mr. Derchin is most impressed by regional airlines with "steady profi-tability" in the last five years. Worthy of premium multiples, he says, are Air Wisconsin, Alaska Airlines, Piedmont, Southwest and USAir. Other buys are Northwest, AMR, Trans World, and as a more speculative play, Midway, a new carrier.

In contrast, urging "caution" on the stocks, is Julius Maldatis, who follows the industry for Salomon Brothers, because "all the enthusiasm for a classic cyclical recovery in the airlines may be over-done."

· He fears that fare wars might well have conditioned discretionary air mavelers to wait for discounts, much as auto buyers now hold off for rebates. As a result, he said the strong rise in first quarter traffic may have been borrowed from later in the year. And, he warned, the industry is on the "knife-edge" of new price wars. Mr. Maldutis' only recommendation is Trans World, TWA's holding company, and that because it may sell off the airline. Other stocks should only perform in synch with the market, he added.

Thomson McKinnon's Mr. Hanneman is also flinty-eyed about the industry, especially toward regionals, whose bluest skies he believes are past. But he touts Republic Airlines as having the potential to double in price during the next year to 18 months.

"A child of deregulation," Republic serves more cities (150) than any other U.S. carrier and after suffering severe losses in recent years, he expects it to break even in 1983 and earn up to $3 a share in 1984. Trans World is also recommended, partly for the buy-out kicker, and so is Pan Am — a "hairy speculation" — because he admits that it may not sur-

The View From Oslo

Tor Falck, investment adviser to Christiania Bank, Osio, is concerned about rising speculation on Wall Street in high-technology stocks.

"So many actors who know nothing about what business the really high-tech' companies do are bidding up share prices," he said. "Our investment strategy is to purchase a technology stock we can understand, sell half the position if it goes up 30 or 40 percent, then buy back on any actreat amounting to half that gain."

He looks for companies with a "solid base in reality" that at the same

He looks for companies with a "solid base in reality" that at the same time have an "intangible, sexy" side that offers big potential. As examples he cited Triad Systems, Pacific Scientific, Argo systems and Pope Evans & Robbins, which makes protective uniforms for the military. Two companies that supply "software" to the machine tool industry, Cross & Trecker and Fared, also attract Mr. Falck, as well as Greyhound, a "revival situation," Susquehanna, which makes housing insulation, and Silver State Mining, a "small but emerging" gold stock.

According to the Bank Credit Analyst, edited in Montreal by I. Anthony Roeckh, "The fundamental bullish forces behind the rising trend of stock prices are still intact. A cyclical economic recovery is under way, profits will recover sharply this year and beyond, and the extensive improvement in balance sheets throughout the private sector will continue. Hence, we expect the final cyclical top in the U.S. stock market will occur at much higher levels and much further out in time."

A People Express Boeing 737 on the runway at Newark Airport.

People Express Plots a New Course

By Carole Shifrin

NEWARK, New Jersey - When it starts flying between Newark and London next month. People Express Airlines will offer travelers a low fare with few frills, but its similarity to Sir Freddie Laker's ill-fated Skytrain ends there, says Donald C. Burr, chairman and president of the rapidly expanding air-

The differences insure that the Newarkbased airline, not quite two years old, will avoid Sir Freddie's problems, Mr. Burr said. "He was strictly a point-to-point local opera-tor between London and New York," he said in an interview in the airline's main offices at Newark International Airport. In contrast, People Express, the largest air-line at Newark, currently operates 68 daily round-trip flights to 15 airports from Newark and expects to add service to 20 additional cities in the next two years. "There's no carrier that can duplicate our route system to London behind Newark," Mr. Burr said.

The airline estimates that more than half the passengers it will carry on its London route will be leaving from or going to other cities on its network, rather than Newark. Besides the proposed $149 unrestricted one-way fare between Newark and London, People Express wants to add just $20 each way for a total of $169 -- to carry passengers to London from other cities it serves, such as Washington, Pittsburgh, Boston and Columbus, Ohio. For service from Florida, an addon of $40 would make the trip to London

Mr. Burr, 42, also pointed out that Laker Airways flew out of New York's JFK International Airport, operating side-by-side with British Airways, Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines. Passengers could pick from any of them, especially after the big three matched Laker's fares.

Because no other airline flies between

Newark and London. People Express will have a monopoly on that route, Mr. Burr said. Newark is more convenient for travelers from New Jersey and is about the same dis-tance to much of Manhattan, but easier to get to, than JFK, he noted.

Laker also took on an enormous amount of debt, buying new, wide-bodied aircraft and was not able to make full use of them. To begin its London service, People Express is leasing a late-model Boeing 747 from grounded Braniff International at an attractive price, with an option to terminate the lease at the end of a year. The airline will pay $50,000 a month for the use of the plane through September, and then $250,000 a month for five years. At the end of the peri-

U.S. Economy Grew at 3.1% Rate in Quarter

By John M. Berry

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economic recovery got off to a modest beginning last quarter with the gross national product rising at an annual rate of only 3.1 percent after adjustment for inflation, the Commerce Department reported

The figure was somewhat lower than most economists had been expecting, but forecasters remained confident that the recovery would continue with unemployment, at 10.3 percent in March, declining slowly in coming months. Real GNP fell at a 1.1 percent rate in the fourth quarter of 1982 as the longest recession in post-war history came to an end.

Even with the relatively small first-quarter gain in GNP - the total output of goods and services for the U.S. economy — Robert Ormer, chief economist at the Commerce Department, said that "it's still very much up in the air" whether the current quarter's increase will be as large.

Some other economists expect to see progressively larger quarterly increases as the year progresses. But virtually all forecasts show a rise in output that would be well below the usual increase in the post-war period for the first year of a recovery, which has exceeded 6

Inflation, as measured by the fixed-weighted GNP price index, fell from a 4.9 percent rate in the fourth quarter to a 3.2 percent rate in the first, the lowest quarterly rate in 11 years. On the other hand, the implicit price deflator, which reflects changes in the composition of output as well as price changes. rose at a 5.8 percent clip, up from a 3.7 percent rate in the previous quarter. One reason for the cautious outlook for the second quarter by Mr. Ortner and other economists is that final sales of goods and services went up at only a 0.9 percent rate in the first quarter, far less than the 5.4 percent rate of the fourth quarter. Spending by consumers was up at a 2.3 percent rate.

The level of business inventories, which had fallen at a $48.3 billion annual rate in the fourth quarter. continued to decline last quarter but at a much smaller $28.5 billion rate. Thus, production in the quar-ter was still lower than the level of sales, and additional increases in output will be needed to bring the liquidation of inventories to a halt.

Economists are counting on that stimulus to production, along with strong increases in residential construction, to keep the recovery going in the short run even if consumers do not step up their spend-ing. The increase in real outlays for housing construction was second only to the change in inventories in contributing to the overall first quarter gain in GNP.

Surprisingly, spending by busi-ness for new plant and equipment also rose at a 2.7 percent rate in the first quarter. With the use of existing production capacity so low, forecasters had expected such outlays to decline for another quarter or two before turning upward.

Meanwhile, both federal government spending and net exports fell Commodity Credit Corporation in

THE WHEELS OF COMMERCE Volume II: Civilization and Capitalism, 15th-18th Century

By Fernand Braudel. Translated from the French by Sian Reynolds. 670 pp. $35. Harper & Row, 10 East 53d St., New York N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Kenneth Galbraith THIS is the second volume to appear in English in the great series by Fernand Braudel, the most noted of French economic historians, on the history of early capitalism. A third volume is yet to come. It is hard and, for that matter, quite inappropriate to restrain one's enthusiasm. His books are wonderful. There are histories in which the information is in the service of a theory of economic, political or social change. And there are those which give you a great deal of narrative and factual information for its own sake. Braudel is concerned to show that capitalism — in this vol-ume the merchant capitalists of the pre-indus-trialist era — was the great motivating and unifying force in the development and spread of European civilization.

There are times, it must be said, when the reader is more than a little overwhelmed by the author's flow of fact - one is amazed, on occasion, that so much could be retrieved from the commercial past, not only of Italy, France and the rest of Western Europe but from the Americas, India and the Far East. And the conclusions of other historians are also kept under review; there is a continuing and generally tolerant discussion of views different from those of the author. In consequence, neither this book nor its predecessor, "The Structures of Everyday Life"— on the agriculture, fishing, food, drink, housing, energy and entertainment of people at large in the years from 1400 to 1800— are to be read in one continuous gulp. They must be taken a chapter or less at a time, and one must be reconciled to the certainty that there will be far more information than the normal brain can possibly absorb

What will be absorbed and remembered is a dazziing array of insights and observations on life and commerce in the age of merchant capi-talism, including much that is fascinating and some that is surprising. At the peak of its activity in the 16th century, more than 100,000 people were huddled together in the colossal silver mining camp of Potosi in the high Andes. In 1614, as support to the considerable business of the money exchanges, 400 different

Bells, British Gift to U.S., Rung to Mark Anniversary

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The Ditchley Bells, a 10bell peal cast in 1976 and a gift from Britain to the U.S. Congress, were officially rung for the first time at the rededication of the Old Post-

Princess Alexandra, cousin to Queen Elizabeth II, formally presented the bells Tuesday to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill at a ceremony marking the 200th anniversary of George Washington's declaration of cess of hostilities in the American Revolution.

currencies were in circulation in the Netherlands. In France, more monetarist in these matters, there were only 82. "There was no known region of Europe, even the very poorest, where the most unlikely currency might!

not find itself trapped." A solid and less surprising theme running through all of these pages — from the mines and sugar plantations of the New World to the spinners and weavers, iron mangers and ti-verse artisans of Europe and the producers of spices and textiles in the Indies — is that, without exception, it was the merchants who made the money. Prices might be high or low; mer-chant margins were almost always good. Merchant success also depended on "one condition

... above all others . . . the recipe [was] given by Claude Carrimere, writing about 15thcentury Barcelona — The best way to make money in big business . . [is] to have some to start with." In urging the civilizing role of merchant capitalism. Braudel makes clear that it was not without adequate compensation. Also, a valuable point of emphasis, he tells in a final and engaging chapter how well the mon-ey served to establish the great merchant fami-lies in the social and political hierarchy of the time. There could be, as in England, a measure of disrepute from being "in trade"; with enough cash, he leaves no doubt, this handicap could be overcome.

The number so privileged, Braudel notes, was not great. He quotes Adolphe Thiers in 1848: "In a state like France, out of 12 million families . . . we know that there are ... two or three hundred at most who can be called opulent."

Brandel, though certainly not the first, has little time for Werner Sombart's case that it was the Jews and their freedom from confining religious restriction that gave the initial im-petus to merchant capitalism — "this is to re-echo Max Weber's theory about Protestantism. for which there are the same good and bad arguments." He does agree that the great merchants "often belonged to foreign minorities, whether by nationality (the Italians in the France of Philip the Fair or François I and in Dhilip II's Spain or by religion. Philip II's Spain) or by religion — the Jews. the Armenians, the Banyans, the Parsees, the Raskolniki in Russia or the Christian Copts.in Muslim Egypt. Why should this have been?! Clearly any minority will have a tendency to stick together, for mutual aid and selfdefense... A minority may easily feel oppressed or discriminated against by the majority and this may in turn dispense it from being over-scrupulous in its dealings with the majori-

I hope I have sufficiently urged the richness of Braudel's books; it would be a serious error to pass over two other points. One is the easy grace of the writing; it never loses itself in technicality, but, at the same time, it is resourceful and never lacking in clarity and pre-cision. One feels always in the company of a careful and conscientious scholar. Perhaps more surprising is the quality of the illustrations. These, the result of a major exercise in research in itself, are spaced elegantly through the text, here a page, there a half page, all succinctly captioned and always appropriate to the story. Not often and not previously in my experience has such good historical research writing been served by such good bookmaking.

Attendance was low at first, despite frequent promotional giveaways. Teams bombed with Mallet Night and Monocle Night, but finally scored big with Money Night, when fans were given bills of various denominations, autographed by former U.S. presidents.

That illustrates the competitive nature of the league's early owners. And their wealth. They gave the NPL the solid financial foundation so necessary for the survival of a new learne.

ART BUCHWALD Arms for Argentina

Falkland Islands war a few weeks ago. The British celebrated, the Argentines mourned, and we were all treated to a tour of the battle-ground by the TV networks.

What wasn't mentioned was that as soon as hostilities ceased, the world's arms merchants descended on Argentina to replenish the loser's arsenal.

The French arrived first and said to the Argentine military, "We're sorry you didn't do as well as you expected, but the good news is that we can sell you our Exocet missile

"Where were you when we needed you?" an Argentine general wanted to know.

"We couldn't ship you the missiles while the war was going on be-cause we didn't want to upset Margaret Thatcher. But now that things have quieted down, we can sell you anything you want. Since you demonstrated to other countries how accurate our Exocet is, we'll give you a free one for every dozen you buy. But you better act fast because we have a lot of countries standing in line for the mis-

The Argentines put in their order immediately.

As soon as the French left, the West Germans walked in. "We told you you couldn't win a war against the British if you didn't have enough sea power. If the fight for the Malvinas proved anything it's that your country needs a strong, modernized navy. West Germany is prepared to build Argentina the most modern ships on the high seas, including first-rate attack submarines. You'll never be militarily humiliated by England again."

The Argentine military chief of staff said, "I thought West Germany and Great Britain were both members of NATO." "NATO is NATO," the West

Needless to say, the Pentagon was upset when they heard about the arms sales. It had nothing to do with the fact that Argentina was getting back into shape to take on the Brits again. It was that President Carter had imposed a military embargo on Argentina because of its human rights abuses, and U.S. weapons exporters were left out in The Pentagon dealers complained to the White House.

"We're losing our best South
American market to the French and West Germans. The Argentines are committed to becoming a first-class military power, and need our stuff to do it. If we don't give them a waiver on human rights, we'll have to close down our Buenos Aires store. Worse still, the Soviets might offer to supply them with the hi-tech equipment just so they can give the British a bloody nose.

President Reagan, when informed that U.S. military equipment wasn't selling in Argentina, started pushing Congress to lift the embargo immediately, and promised he would deal with the human rights problem later.

In the meantime, private arms dealers in Virginia assured the Argentines they could order any U.S. equipment they wanted through third countries, who would rather have the cash

The Argentines, according to reports, are now in bock up to their cars, but will soon be militarily stronger than they have ever been before. They are the first to admit they couldn't do it alone.

Gillian Armstrong's Brilliant Career

By Megan Rosenfeld Washington Pan Service

WASHINGTON — The credit line for her first full-lands for her first full-length feature film, "My Brilliant Career," read "Gill Armstrong." which sounded more androgynous than she had expected. So her name on her latest film, "Starstruck," which opened here recently, reads firmly, "Directed By Gillian Armstrong." That's because she is proud of being a woman filmmaker and didn't want to confuse anybody.

"I did it because people over here thought Gill was a boy," she said. "But I've noticed that another friend of mine, Phil Noyes, is now Philip. A lot of Australian filmmakers are changing like that. When we start using middle initials, then you'll know we're really getting pretentious."

Armstrong, at 32, is among a handful of filmmakers who have created an industry in Australia during the last 10 years that has gained enormous recognition and popularity. Being so new, the Australian industry is not restricted by the bureaucracy and large bud-get exclusivity of Hollywood, and its movies have been hailed as original and well produced. Directors like Armstrong work independently, financing each picture as it comes along, choosing projects they like and working with comparatively small budgets.

"After 'My Brilliant Career' came out (in 1980), my agent introduced me to some Hollywood producers," Armstrong said during a visit to Washington. "The first one asked me what sort of films I'd like to do. I said, 'Any sort, and then he said, What about a thriller?" and I realized I didn't want to do that, and I didn't want to do almost any kind of film they would name."

Instead, she spent over two years after fin-ishing the critically acclaimed "My Brilliant Career" looking for the right project. One of those years was devoted to developing a script with a writer that never worked out, an investment of time and money she said she will not repeat. "I won't be that stupid again," she swore. "Now I'm working on three ideas at the same time, and maybe one of them will work out."

She wanted to do something completely different from "My Brilliant Career," which was set in the 1890s and graphically pictured the social straitjackets placed on a woman with an independent mind.

"People thought I wore my hair in a bun and stayed home embroidering and listening to Schumann," she said. In fact, she has re-cently cut her long bleached-blond "surfer girl" hair into a punk shae, and on this day was wearing a large, fuzzy blue sweater-dress decorated with colored beads, a black-andwhite polka-dot blouse, black tights and blue suede shoes. She is a fan of rock music, which is one reason "Starstruck," a new-wave musical comedy, appealed to her.

Having gone to art school for four years,

Director Armstrong: "I have a lot of pretentious ideas."

she said, "I have a lot of pretentious ideas. I hip young filmmaker. And here I was telling like to think of myself as an artist. My films are an expression of myself, but also, I hope, of political and social concerns."

Her first plan for her second feature film was a serious piece of social realism on youth unemployment. The script that failed was written by a "young communist," whose politics, however acceptable, were not enough.

"Starstruck" deals with youth, but it is anything but serious. The main character is a young woman from a working-class family who wants to be a new-wave singing star and, with the help of her recklessly daring younger cousin, brazens her way onto a television show. At one point her cousin persuades her to walk a tightrope strung between two office buildings while wearing an artificial torso of huge breasts. In another scene she is invited to a party that turns into a water ballet with a chorus line of homosexual men in bathing suits. The auditions for those parts, she recalled with a giggle, were a switch on the usual cheesecake cattle call, with a woman director and choreographer reviewing the beefcake. Most of the swimmers are university athletes. "It's totally frivolous," she said about the movie. "But there was something that touched me about the people. When I was interviewing actors, I knew some of the very heavy ones would ask why on earth I was doing this frivolous film, so I prepared an answer for them: It's in praise of free spirits.

That shut them up." Unable to find her leads among the established actors in Australia, Armstrong cast two unknowns, and for the first time in her life found herself a mother figure. "Tve always felt like a young person, you know — a people to get to bed early and eat properly. I felt old for the first time.

When we hired lo Kennedy (who plays the female lead) she was living in a ware-house with 20 other intemployed rock musicians and thought that was absolutely great. When we moved her to Sydney for the filming we had to say, 'Please get an apartment, and a telephone.' She thought that anyone over 25 was not worth talking to, and she was so unhappy when she first came on the set."

In "Brilliant Career" the heroine tells the man she loves that she will not many him because she wants to be a writer and she can't do both, a scene that Armstrong said was partly misconveyed because she cast too appealing a man as the rejected suitor. "I admit failure in that area," she said. "You were meant to see that they were not really like spirits, and that was the main reason she wouldn't many him. But it was also the 1890s, and women then faced having a baby a year. She couldn't face that either."

Armstrong has neither husband nor babies herself, and believes it would be very hard indeed for her to manage while being a film director. "When I make a feature film I just say goodbye to my friends for three months. It takes that kind of commitment. When I finish I find I don't even know what's happened in the world because I haven't been paying attention."

One of her eccentricities is that she doesn't drive, which is as unusual in Australia as it is here. "I did drive for two years, but I'm not very good at it. I'm too passive and too aggressive. I would lose patience with parking for example. For the benefit of humanity decided to stop."

In Barcelona, Mann-el Pujol Baladas, 35, who told a magazine last month he had painted 400 works in the style of Salvador Dali, many with forged signa-tures, was charged with forging paintings for financial reward in a Barcelona investigation of 266 paintings of doubtful origin. Under Spanish law he can be held in proventive detention for several months unless he can find bail, set by the court at 1 million pesetas (about $7,350). Court sources said 34 of the 266 paintings had so far been proven false and the fraud was worth about 37 million pesetas (about $272,000). An intermediary and an art gallery owner who sold 17 of the works has also been detained, they said. False signatures included those of Dali, Picasso, Miró, Goya and Toulouse-Lautrec, they said.
